Local Elections in Turkey 2019

Introduction

Turkey will go to the polls on March 31 2019 to elect their local representatives. Depending on where they live, people will vote for mayors, municipal council members, provincial assembly members, neighbourhood representatives (mukhtar) and council of elders. The upcoming local elections will be the first under Turkey’s new presidential system. Although there are no major variations between the current and previous local elections, political parties have been following the alliance strategy as they did for the parliamentary and presidential elections held on June 24th 2018, following the adoption of the Presidential System.

The local elections will be held across 30 metropolitan municipalities, 51 provincial municipalities, 922 district municipalities, 32,105 neighbourhoods and 18,306 villages. The People’s Alliance, composed of the AK Party (Justice and Development Party) and MHP (Nationalist Movement Party), agreed to cooperate in all of 30 metropolitan municipalities in addition to 21 provincial municipalities. The CHP (Republican People’s Party) and IYI Party (Good Party) led Nation’s Alliance, on the other hand, will be cooperating in 23 metropolitan municipalities and 27 provincial municipalities. In Istanbul, Ankara and Izmir, Turkey’s 3 largest cities, the AK Party’s and CHP’s mayoral candidates will be competing, with the MHP supporting the former’s candidates and the IYI Party supporting the latter’s.

Local elections in Turkey have always been perceived as the cornerstone of politics in the country by political parties, individual politicians and voters alike. This info pack delves into the question of why local elections are an important phenomena in Turkish political life. It also provides the profiles of the major political parties running in the elections and their manifestos for the upcoming local elections. In addition, essential information about the March 31 polls is laid out with a particular attention to the major cities, namely Istanbul, Ankara, Izmir, Diyarbakır, Adana and Balıkesir.

Lastly, the info pack explores measures taken to ensure security for the election, information regarding election integrity and how votes are cast and regulated.
Anatomy of Local Elections in Turkey

There are two layers of government in Turkey: the central government and local governments. Local governments are elected through popular vote for a five-year term. Local governments’ authority to govern in their respective districts is protected by the constitution. However, the constitution also entitles the central government to watch over local authorities in order to ensure the integrity of the administration in the country. Regarding the relationship between central and local governments, Turkey follows the rules and standards of the European Charter of Local Self-Government, as it is one of the signatories of the charter. The charter sets out the standards for protecting the rights of local authorities and requires states to comply with a number of conditions, principles and practices.

The first municipality dates back to the 19th century in Istanbul, the capital of the Ottoman Empire, where the first municipal entity – known as the “Şehremaneti” – was established in 1854. From then on, local government has played a vital role in the social, economic and political fabric of Turkey. According to official figures, in 2018 local governments were responsible for approximately 35 percent of total public investments in areas such as transportation, healthcare, arts, culture, sports and tourism. Furthermore, since the 1990s municipal governments have been the cornerstone of the social welfare system in the country. This includes providing a range of social services to the poor, including healthcare, education, food and clothing. Therefore, one can suggest that the citizen-state relationship begins at the local level between the public and municipal governments.

Municipalities in Turkey have various type of responsibilities including - but not limited to - infrastructure, sanitation, fire and rescue services, local public security services, public health, providing construction permits, supervising the pricing of retail markets, opening up public bazaars, establishing industrial sites, promoting education, providing vocational courses and establishing public libraries. In addition to those, municipalities are also liable for transportation, providing religious and wedding services, establishing student dormitories, protecting and renovating historical artefacts and opening up art and sports centres.

From the ruling political party’s perspective, local elections are seen as a litmus test for the performance of the central government. For opposition parties, it is a springboard for the next general elections. Local elections are also significant for individual politicians. Many politicians in national politics in Turkey have a background in local politics. Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdoğan, for instance, won the municipal elections in Istanbul in 1994 and it was his performance as the mayor of Istanbul that brought him into the forefront of Turkish politics.
Voting Behaviour

Voter behaviour in general is studied from various theoretical perspectives. The most prominent models are the rational (economic), psychological (partisanship) and sociological (social cleavages) models. The rational model suggests that voters punish or reward the incumbent government for their economic performance on the basis of their self-interested calculations. The psychological model focuses on voters’ previous political and ideological affiliation. Proponents of this model claim that partisanship is the most powerful explanatory tool in determining the causes of voter behaviour. The sociological model on the other hand, argues that the social cleavages, such as ethnicity, religion, class and occupation, are the sources of why voters decide to vote for one party but not another.

Voter behaviour studies regarding local and general elections in Turkey have traditionally utilized the sociological model. Sociology professor Şerif Mardin’s renowned ‘centre-periphery’ explanation of Turkish society has been at the forefront of these studies. According to this explanation, the centre is consists of a wealthier and generally more secular segment of the population while the periphery is composed of relatively poor and conservative people. Other studies that apply the sociological model to their analysis focus on the left-right divergence/economic ideology and ethnic and religious identity amongst the Turkish public, suggesting that voters cast their votes based on their position on the ideological spectrum, ethnicity and/or level of religiosity.

The economic model has also been applied in explaining the Turkish electorate’s voting behaviour. These models suggest that voters consider the previous and current economic performance of the incumbent government when casting their votes. There are also other studies looking into impacts of family and social environment on political affiliation and the resulting voting behaviour of the Turkish electorate. Additionally, security concerns of citizens have – from time to time – had a significant impact on voting behaviour. As numerous studies have shown, the Turkish electorate’s sensitivity to terrorism and security can significantly affect their voting decisions.

Apart from the factors listed above, the profiles of the mayoral candidates greatly shape the voter’s decisions. The importance of candidate profiles is more evident in smaller cities and districts whereas party preference has a greater effect on voters’ decisions in metropolitan cities. All in all, voters take the political party (its leader, cadre and programme), the candidate, the current agenda of the country, religion, ethnicity, economy, ideology into consideration and form their decision on the basis of their priorities.

How Local Elections Work in Turkey?

- Local elections are regulated according to the Local Electoral Law (Law 2972) which determines the rules before, during and after the election.

- In local elections, people have a different number of votes depending on the type of district they live in.
  - People who live in a metropolitan city (cities with over 750 thousand residents) will cast their votes for:
    - Metropolitan municipality mayor
    - District mayor
    - Municipal Council members
    - Neighbourhood Representative (mukhtar) and Council of Elders
  - People who live in cities (cities which are not metropolitan city) will cast their votes for:
    - Mayor
    - Municipal Council members
    - Provincial Assembly Members
    - Neighbourhood Representative (mukhtar) and Council of Elders
  - People who live in villages will cast their votes for:
    - Provincial Assembly Members
    - Neighbourhood Representative (mukhtar) and Community Representatives

- A proportional representation system with a ten percent election threshold is used for provincial assembly elections and municipal council elections.

- First-past-the-post system is used for municipal elections (mayoral elections).

- Local elections are held every 5 years.

---

1 Ten percent election threshold is introduced after 1980 military coup. It is applied to the parliamentary elections along with the provincial assembly and municipal council elections during the local elections. According to this rule, only those political parties which gains at least 10% of the total votes in their respective electoral districts will be able to have representatives in the aforementioned institutions.
Local Elections in Turkey 2019

Turkey held its last local elections on March 30th, 2014. Since then, Turkey has held three general elections, a constitutional referendum and a presidential election. The constitutional referendum, which passed with 51% of the vote on April 16 2017, represents a milestone in the political history of Turkey. With the approval of the amendments, the political system has switched from parliamentary to presidential.

Under the new presidential system, the first general and presidential elections were held on June 24th, 2018. For the first time, parties were allowed to form official alliances in general elections. As such, two alliances emerged: AK Party, MHP and Grand Unity Party (Büyük Birlik Partisi) formed the People’s Alliance, while the CHP, İYI Party, Felicity Party (Saadet Partisi) and Democrat Party (Demokrat Parti) established the Nation’s Alliance. The newly emerged alliance system has been adopted by political parties in the upcoming local elections through collaboration in certain strategically important municipalities. The continuation of the alliances indicates that the nature of the presidential system has affected behaviour of political parties in the local elections.

The AK Party and the MHP - as part of the People’s Alliance - are collaborating in 51 out of 81 provinces through the nomination of single candidates. In the largest three cities - Istanbul, Ankara and Izmir - the MHP is supporting the AK Party’s candidates while in Adana, Mersin and Manisa, the AK Party is supporting MHP’s candidates.

The main opposition CHP and İYI Party - under the Nation’s Alliance - are cooperating in a total of 50 provinces. The İYI Party is supporting CHP’s candidates in Istanbul, Ankara and Izmir. Felicity Party and Democrat Party, previous members of Nation’s Alliance, have not been involved in the alliance in the local elections and have nominated their own candidates. Additionally, the HDP (People’s Democratic Party) has not nominated candidates in 11 metropolitan cities including Istanbul, Ankara and Izmir, yet its candidates are running in several districts of Istanbul.

AK Party (Justice and Development Party)

- The AK Party is a conservative-democratic party that was founded by a reformist faction within the Virtue (Fazilet) Party in 2001.
- Recep Tayyip Erdoğan is the founding and the current leader of the party.
- The AK Party is the largest political organization in Turkey with more than ten million members.
- The AK Party has come first in all elections that it has taken part in since 2002.
- The AK Party also spearheaded the constitutional referendums of 2007, 2010 and 2017.
- With the exception of the period between June 7th and November 1st 2015 general elections during which the attempts to form a coalition government failed, the AK Party has been able to form single party governments since the 2002 general elections.
- Accession negotiations between the EU and Turkey began in 2005 during the AK Party’s rule.
- In its 17 year-rule, the AK Party has touched upon several chronic issues in Turkish politics, including normalising civilian-military relations, regulations about minorities, and openings with the Kurdish and Alevi communities.
- In previous local elections, the AK Party won 41.67% (2004), 38.39% (2009) and 42.87% (2014) of the votes respectively.

CHP (Republican People’s Party)

- The CHP is a social-democrat party that was established in 1923 by Mustafa Kemal Atatürk, founder of Turkish Republic.
- Six fundamental pillars represent the Kemalist ideology of the CHP: Republicanism, Populism, Nationalism, Secularism, Statism, and Reformism.
- It is the oldest political party in Turkey.
- The CHP ruled the country under a one-party system until 1946 when the first multi-party elections were held.
- In 1950, the CHP lost its long-lasting status as the single ruling party.
- Since then, the CHP has not succeeded in forming a government without coalition partners.
- Since 2002, the CHP has served as the main opposition party in the parliament.
- Elected in 2010, Kemal Kılıçdaroğlu is the current leader of the CHP.
- In the upcoming local elections, the CHP is cooperating with the İYİ Party in some of the municipalities as the continuation of the Nation’s Alliance formed for the 2018 national elections.
- The CHP obtained 18.23% of the votes in 2004, 23.08% in 2009 and 26.34% in the 2014 local elections.
MHP (Nationalist Movement Party)

- The MHP is a Turkish nationalist party established in 1969 by Alpaslan Türkeş under the name Republican Villagers Nation Party.
- Devlet Bahçeli has been the leader of the party since 1997.
- Under Bahçeli’s leadership, the MHP gained 18% of the vote and 129 seats in the 1999 general elections, forming a collation government with the DSP (Democratic Left Party) and the Motherland Party (Anavatan Partisi).
- The MHP, along with the AK Party, formed the People’s Alliance prior to the June 24th general elections.
- The MHP obtained 10.45% (2004), 15.97% (2009) and 17.82% (2014) in the three previous local elections.

IYI Party (Good Party)

- Founded on October 25th 2017, The IYI Party is a relatively new party in Turkish politics.
- The main figures of the IYI Party are composed of central right, national and conservative wings of Turkish politics.
- The founder and the leader of the party is Meral Akşener, who ran for the presidency in 2018 and received 7.3% of the votes.
- Their first electoral experience was in the 2018 general and presidential elections, where they secured 10% of the vote.
- The IYI Party formed Nation’s Alliance before the 2018 elections along with the CHP, the Felicity Party and Democrat Party.
- In the upcoming local elections, the IYI Party is cooperating with the main opposition CHP in several municipalities.

Felicity Party

- The Felicity Party is an Islamist party founded in 2001 after the Constitutional Court closed down its predecessor, the Welfare Party.
- The party represents the ideas of the “National View” (Milli Görüş) movement that was founded and led by former Prime Minister of Turkey, Necmettin Erbakan.
- The party has envisaged close cooperation and unity among Muslim countries.
- Temel Karamollaoğlu has been the leader of the party since 2016.
- The Felicity Party formed Nation’s Alliance before the 2018 elections along with the CHP, the IYI Party and Democrat Party.
- The party received 4.02% of the votes in 2004, 5.20% in 2009 and 2.56% of the votes in 2014 local elections respectively.
- In their election manifesto, the party draws attention to concepts of honesty and justice as solutions to the problems people face.
HDP (Peoples’ Democratic Party)

- The HDP was founded on October 27th, 2013 and is a successor to a long line of pro-Kurdish parties.
- The politics of the HDP is shaped by its leftist pro-Kurdish ideology.
- The leadership of the HDP is managed through a co-presidential system. The current co-chairs are Sezai Temelli and Pervin Buldan.
- Former co-presidents of the party, Selahattin Demirtaş and Figen Yüksekdağ are currently in custody, facing accusations of supporting terrorist related activities.
- Many MPs, mayors, and administrators from the HDP have been put on trial and some of them have been convicted on charges of being associated with the PKK terrorist group.
- In the 2014 local elections, the HDP and Peace and Democracy Party, which ran parallel to HDP in south-eastern cities, received 6.14% of the vote.
- The HDP has not nominated municipality candidates in some of the big cities including Istanbul, Ankara and Izmir in the upcoming local elections.

Democrat Party

- The Democrat Party is the current successor of Suleyman Demirel’s True Path Party (Doğru Yol Partisi), Turgut Özal’s Motherland Party and Adnan Menderes’s Democrat Party (Demokrat Parti) which continued its political life from 1946 till 1960.
- The Democrat Party emerged in 2007 after the merger of True Path Party and Motherland Party, under the leadership of Mehmet Ağar, who is a popular figure in Turkish politics.
- Since its establishment, the party has never been represented in the parliament.
- The party is ideologically oriented to the centre-right.
- The Democrat Party was one of the parties that constituted the Nation’s Alliance in the lead up to the June 2018 general elections.
- The party summarizes their municipality perspective with openness, efficiency and participation.

DSP (Democratic Left Party)

- The DSP was founded on 14 November 1985.
- The DSP was founded by Bülent Ecevit, former leader of CHP.
- The ideology of the party is rooted in social democracy.
- The DSP became the leading party, receiving 22.19% of the votes in the 1999 general elections and formed a coalition government with MHP and the Motherland Party.
- Because of the ongoing political and economic crisis, the DSP failed to pass the 10% threshold in the early general elections in 2002, and were thereby not represented in the parliament.
- In 2004 Bülent Ecevit resigned from his position as chairperson of the party.
- The DSP received 2.11% (2004), 2.85% (2009) and 0.33% (2014) of the vote in the three previous local elections respectively.

The Race in the Major Cities

Istanbul

Istanbul is the most important city for the political parties in the local elections. The city is home to more than 15 million people, nearly 20% of Turkey’s total population. Moreover, the city is the economic and sociocultural capital of the country. The AK Party and its predecessors have been governing Istanbul since current President Recep Tayyip Erdoğan was elected as mayor in 1994.

Binali Yıldırım

Binali Yıldırım is a founding member of the AK Party and a prominent figure in Turkish political life. During his political career Yıldırım served in various positions, including as Minister of Transportation and Communication, and Prime Minister. Yıldırım was the last Prime Minister of the country following Turkey’s transition to a presidential system.

Following the 2018 general elections, he was elected as the Speaker of the Parliament. Yıldırım resigned from his post to run for the Istanbul Metropolitan Municipality in the upcoming local elections. Mr Yıldırım is supported by the People’s Alliance formed by the AK Party and the MHP.

Ekrem İmamoğlu

Ekrem İmamoğlu is the current mayor of Istanbul’s Beylikdüzü district. Before his current post, İmamoğlu served as chairman of his family business, board member of Trabzonspor Football Club and executive of the CHP’s local organisation in Beylikdüzü.

Following his tenure in Beylikdüzü Mr. İmamoğlu was nominated for the Istanbul Metropolitan Municipality by the CHP. Ekrem İmamoğlu’s candidacy is also supported by the İYİ Party as part of the Nation’s Alliance formed between the CHP and the İYİ Party.

Local Elections in Turkey 2019

Ankara

Turkey’s capital Ankara is the second most populated city with 5.5 million inhabitants. Due to its high population and centrality in Turkish political life, Ankara is one of the most regarded cities in local elections. The metropolitan municipality of Ankara has been ruled by the AK Party and its predecessors since the 1994 local elections.

Mehmet Özhaseki

Mehmet Özhaseki began his political career in his home city of Kayseri in central Turkey. He was elected as mayor of Kayseri for four terms, serving in the post for nearly two decades. In the 2015 general elections he was elected as an MP, serving as Minister of Environment and Urban Planning until 2018.

Mehmet Özhaseki is the AK Party’s current Deputy Chairman, responsible for local administrations. Mr. Özhaseki will be running as the AK Party’s mayoral candidate for the Ankara Metropolitan Municipality, with the support of the MHP.

Mansur Yavaş

Mansur Yavaş was elected as mayor of Ankara’s Beypazarı district in the 1999 and 2004 elections. In 2009 he became the MHP candidate for the Ankara Metropolitan Municipality and came in third following the AK Party and CHP candidates. Prior to the 2014 local elections Mr. Yavaş joined the CHP and ran for Ankara’s mayor for the second time. Although Mr. Yavaş lost the elections he was able to raise his votes.

Mr Yavaş will be running for the third time to become mayor of Ankara as CHP’s candidate. His candidacy is also supported by İYİ Party.

Mehmet Özhaseki’s Election Pledges

- Facilities for children
- New green parks
- Culture investments
- New transportation projects

Mansur Yavaş’s Election Pledges

- New technology and industrial park
- New underground metro lines
- Renovation of the historical city
- Tourism investments
Izmir

Izmir is Turkey’s third largest city with a population of 4.3 million. Located on the coast of the Aegean Sea, one the most industrialised part of the country, Izmir is a port city linking the Aegean region to the world. The city has been an economic and sociocultural hub throughout its history. Izmir is known as the stronghold of the main opposition party CHP party and the city has been run by CHP mayors since 1999.

In the upcoming local elections the CHP’s candidate will be Izmir’s Seferhisar district mayor, Tunç Soyer. The AK Party will be running with the former Minister of Economy, Nihat Zeybekçi.

Nihat Zeybekçi

Nihat Zeybekçi began his political career in his hometown Denizli in the Aegean region. In the 2004 and 2009 local elections, he was elected as the Mayor of the Denizli Municipality from the AK Party. In the 2011 general elections Zeybekçi was elected to the parliament. From 2013 to 2018 he served as Minister of Economy in the AK Party government.

Zeybekçi is the AK Party’s candidate for the Izmir Metropolitan Municipality. The MHP is also supporting Zeybekçi’s candidacy for Izmir.

Tunç Soyer

Tunç Soyer is a local politician in Izmir and has served as mayor of the Seferhisar district since 2009. Before his current post, he served as an advisor in the Izmir Metropolitan Municipality and Deputy Secretary General of the Izmir Chamber of Commerce.

The CHP announced Soyer as their candidate in the upcoming local elections for the Izmir Metropolitan Municipality. Soyer’s candidacy is also supported by İYİ Party.
Local Elections in Turkey 2019

Diyarbakır
Diyarbakır is located in southeast Turkey and it is one of the most populous cities of the country with a population of 1.7 million. The HDP and its predecessor parties have won local elections in the city since 1999. However, the HDP’s most recent mayor, Gülten Kışanak, was removed from her post by the Interior Ministry after the Diyarbakır Prosecutor opened an investigation against her.

In the upcoming elections, the most powerful parties for the Diyarbakır Metropolitan Municipality are the HDP and the AK Party. The HDP candidate is Selçuk Mazraklı, a local politician who currently serves as a Diyarbakır MP. The AK Party’s candidate is the current mayor appointed by the Interior Ministry Cumalı Atilla. He is also supported by the MHP.

Adana
Adana is one of the most populous and industrialised cities of Turkey. The city is located in southern Turkey on the Mediterranean coast and is home to 2.2 million people. All of the major political parties have a strong presence in the city. Although the MHP has been the winner of the last two local elections in Adana, the AK Party and the CHP also won the metropolitan municipality in the past.

In Adana the race will be between the MHP and the CHP. The AK Party has announced its support to the MHP candidate and the İYİ Party announced their support for the CHP candidate. The MHP’s candidate is the current mayor, Hüseyin Sözlü. The CHP’s candidate is another local politician, Adana’s Seyhan district mayor Zeydan Karalar.

Balıkesir
Balıkesir is another city where the parties have formed strategic alliances. The city is home to 1.2 million people and located in western Turkey between the Marmara and Aegean Seas. In the 2018 general election, The People’s Alliance won 49% and Nation’s Alliance won 47% of the vote respectively. These results have made the city an important constituency for both of the alliances in the upcoming local elections.

AK Party candidate Yücel Yılmaz will be running for the People’s Alliance. Currently, Yılmaz serves as Balıkesir’s Karesi district mayor. The İYİ Party’s Ismail Ok will be running for the Nation’s Alliance. Ismail Ok is a former MHP member and served as Balıkesir Metropolitan Municipality Mayor from 2009 to 2014.
How does the Electoral Process play out?

- All Turkish citizens over 18 years of age have the right to vote in elections and referenda, with the exception of those holding the military rank of private, corporal, sergeant, or cadet, and those in penal institutions.

- For a strictly up-to-date voter database, the Address Registration System and Identity Sharing System of General Directorate of Civil Registry and Nationality continuously updates the electoral register by storing personal data of Turkish Citizens over the age of 18.

- The Supreme Election Board (YSK), which acts as the highest legal authority on electoral matters, is responsible for overseeing and conducting the elections and for all other relevant issues.

- Elections in Turkey are strictly monitored by international and domestic observers.

- All activities related to electoral works (pre-election, on election day, and post-election) during an electoral calendar realised by district election boards throughout Turkey, are undertaken under the auspices of the SECSIS software, an electronic election management system.

- Political parties are eligible to monitor and audit the election results, which are shared electronically, in accordance with electoral Law 298.

- Tallying and counting operations prepared by ballot box committees are transferred to the electronic environment following the end of the voting process and all information and documents on political parties are simultaneously shared.

The SECSIS system

- Turkey’s electronic election infrastructure has been developed with the aim of enabling voters to monitor the information-registered systems, such as identity, addresses and polling stations where they will exercise their voting rights.

- The system has also been used in eliminating duplicate electoral records, announcing election results in very short periods of time, allowing political parties to simultaneously monitor ballot results delivered by district election boards, informing the public about decisions and regulations of YSK, shortening the work processes and increasing the efficiency and productivity with its interactive services – thereby acting as a tool to enhance the transparency of elections.

- Once ballot box results data have been entered into the SECSIS system, temporary results are transmitted simultaneously via web services over a safe and closed line to the YSK and the headquarters of political parties.

- The minutes of the counting process signed by ballot box committees are screened by district election boards and entered into the system, which are also simultaneously shared by headquarters of political parties.

- To maintain transparency, the temporary results presented by district election boards are published on www.ysk.gov.tr so that the public can also view the results based on electoral region. As of date of finalization, the summary of election results are published on the Official Gazette.
Local Elections in Turkey 2019

Prior to the elections, citizens living in Turkey are recommended to visit www.ysk.gov.tr to check their registration status and where and in which ballot they will vote.

In the run-up to the local elections, meetings are organised with informatics experts from the political parties in order to evaluate the state of preparations and to discuss technical issues of monitoring and sharing of electoral results.

On the day of voting, informatics experts from all political parties are invited to the SECSIS Informatics Centre.

It is an interface providing all kinds of necessary information related to electoral integrity for participating political parties before, during, and after the elections.

During an electoral cycle, the following are simultaneously shared with political parties over SECSIS and are kept under record:

- Domestic voter lists on public review
- Voters changes within the public review period
- Voter changes within the period of objections
- Information on ballot result minutes entered into Electoral Informatics System (SECSIS)
- Scanned signed ballot results minutes

Ballot result minutes with original signature by ballot box committee – composed of one president, one Council of Elders member and members of five political parties - are entered into SECSIS by personnel of the district election boards.

In line with the 2010 amendment on Law 298 on Basic Provisions of Elections and Voters Registers, results are monitored by members of the YSK and members of political parties and simultaneously shared electronically with political parties participating in elections.

This process also acts as a verification mechanism whereby political parties have the opportunity to compare the results scanned onto SECSIS and the results obtained manually.
Local Elections in Turkey 2019

Conclusion

The March 31 elections are the first local elections to be held following the constitutional changes approved in 2017, which had a significant impact on Turkey’s political culture – including on the upcoming local elections - most notably in the option of forming political alliances.

Although alliances are not legally formed as in the case of the general elections, they will play a large role in determining the next mayors in many municipalities. By forming alliances with major parties, minor parties will have the chance to be represented in the local government through their members in the city councils. In return they will support the mayor candidates of their allies.

Another dimension of the alliance system is that allied parties have the cities among themselves in order to increase the likelihood of victory. For example, Adana and Antalya are both metropolitan municipalities with similar populations. To strengthen the likelihood of winning both of these metropolitan cities the People’s Alliance agreed to present only one candidate in each city. According to the agreement, the MHP’s candidate will run for the mayor post in Adana while the AK Party mayor in Antalya will seek re-election. Both parties will support their ally’s candidate in each of the respective cities.

Nearly all of the political parties announced local election manifestos. Prominent projects outlined in the manifestos include pledges to solve transportation and infrastructure problems and the deployment of smart technology to improve the way cities function. Traffic and public transportation are two of the top priorities for the public in the three big city Istanbul, Ankara and Izmir. All the candidates are promising to build new underground metro lines to ease traffic and improve the public transportation. Green areas are the second most emphasised issues, especially in metropolitan cities. Furthermore, all of the major parties have included plans to develop large green spaces and parks in city centres. A new phenomenon that was not strongly addressed in prior local elections is the use of technology to increase the quality of people’s lives. Candidates are promising to employ these smart technology solutions in areas such as transportation, energy and infrastructure.

It is expected that provisional results will be available towards midnight on the night of March 31. New mayors and city council members will start their duties right after the YSK announces the final results in early April.
